
A new back-to-school season in Canada

A limited access to the kitchen laboratories

A message from Dr. John Tibbits, President of Conestoga College

"While Ontario and Canada's other provinces have seen some easing of pandemic-related restrictions in recent weeks, public health experts continue to warn that the danger has not passed, and that we must remain vigilant in order to prevent a resurgence of COVID-19 cases across our communities.

For the last several weeks, Conestoga's academic teams have been working in close collaboration with the college's Executive Pandemic Planning Committee, developing plans to support students who were unable to complete their Winter and Spring 2020 semesters as well as to deliver the best possible learning experience for Fall 2020.

Beginning in mid-July, we will open a limited number of campus facilities to support learning activities that cannot be completed remotely. This includes Culinary and Hospitality Programs. These facilities will operate under strict health and safety guidelines that include physical distancing plans, hygiene measures and enhanced cleaning regimes in accordance with public health recommendations.

The safety and well-being of everyone across our college community remains our top priority. Only those people who are required to be on-campus will be granted access to Conestoga buildings and facilities. A pre-approval and screening process for campus access is now in place and will apply to all students, employees and visitors.

Most college programs and services will continue to be delivered remotely in Fall 2020, with some campus facilities such as labs, studios and shops open for the delivery of essential course elements that cannot be completed by distance".
